

The Federal Budget and Appropriations Process

By Sarah Mickelson, Senior Director of Public Policy, National Low Income Housing Coalition

Funding the federal government is a two-part process that occurs annually. First, a federal budget resolution is passed, then funds are appropriated among federal agencies and programs.

Both the administration and Congress participate in the process of developing a federal budget resolution that establishes the overall framework and maximum dollar amount for government spending in a fiscal year (FY). The appropriations process is also handled entirely by Congress, and establishes the amount of funding for individual activities of the federal government. Although the budget resolution should be completed and funds appropriated during the prior FY, in recent years, Congress has not completed the appropriations processes in advance of the start of the FY due to disagreements between the House and Senate over top line budget amounts.

TYPES OF FEDERAL SPENDING AND REVENUE

There are three categories of spending for which the budget and appropriations process establishes limits and defines uses: discretionary, mandatory, and tax.

Discretionary Spending. As the name suggests, government expenditures in the discretionary portion of the budget are subject to annual evaluation by the president and Congress. Although the discretionary portion of the budget represents less than half of total annual expenditures, it is the area of spending that the president and Congress focus on most. Each year, the administration and Congress re-evaluate the need to allocate funds for federal departments, programs, and activities. Discretionary spending amounts vary annually, depending upon administration and Congressional policy priorities.

Mandatory Spending. Mandatory spending is almost entirely made up of spending on entitlements, such as Social Security and Medicaid. Expenditures for entitlements are based on a formula that is applied to the number of households eligible for a benefit. The amount of funding in a given year is determined by that formula. Typically, the administration and Congress do not focus much on this spending in the budget and appropriations processes. However, 2017 could be an exception if Congress uses the budget resolution to direct authorizing committees to participate in a budget cutting processes called budget reconciliation, whereby authorizing committees are required to suggest savings from mandatory programs.

Tax Revenue. Taxes provide revenue to the government to fund spending priorities. Tax policy includes not just revenues, but also expenditures in the form of deductions, credits, and other tax breaks. These expenditures reduce the total potential tax that could be collected to provide revenue for the federal government. Each year, the administration and Congress decide what tax revenues to collect and what tax expenditures to make by forgoing revenue collection in pursuit of certain policy priorities.

BUDGET PROCESS

The federal FY runs from October 1 through September 30. Planning for the upcoming FY begins as early as a year-and-a-half prior to the beginning of the FY.

President's Budget Request. The budget process officially commences on the first Monday of February, when the president is required by law to provide a budget request to Congress for all administration activities in the coming FY.

The president's budget request to Congress includes funding requests for discretionary programs, mandatory programs, and taxes. The majority of housing programs are funded through the discretionary portion of the budget. The president's funding request for discretionary programs varies from year to year to reflect the administration's evolving policy priorities.

Congressional Budget Resolution. Once the president submits a budget to Congress, the House and Senate Committees on the Budget prepare a budget resolution. The budget resolution sets the overall framework for spending for a one-year fiscal term. The resolution includes a top-line spending figure for discretionary activities.

Appropriations use this figure as the maximum amount of funding that can be appropriated in the next FY. This new discretionary cap either increases or decreases the overall amount of funding that the Committees on Appropriations have available to allocate to HUD and USDA's affordable housing activities. Even though the budget resolution establishes the overall spending level for the FY, it does not go into detail as to how this funding will be allocated. The details are the job of the Committees on Appropriations, which begin their work after Congress agrees to a budget resolution.

To craft the budget resolution, the House and Senate Committees on the Budget first hold hearings at which administration officials testify regarding the president's budget request. The Committees on the Budget each craft their own budget resolutions. The House and Senate then attempt to agree on a final budget resolution. Because this is a resolution, not a bill, it does not have to be signed into law by the president.

Once Congress passes a budget resolution, the appropriations work begins. If Congress does not pass a budget resolution by the statutory deadline of April 15, the Committees on Appropriations are free to begin their appropriations work.

If Congress does not pass its appropriations bills by the October 1 start of the fiscal year, it must provide funding for the period after the FY fiscal year ends and before an appropriations bill is passed. This funding is provided by a continuing resolution (CR).

A CR continues funding for programs funded in the prior fiscal year, usually at the funding level from the year prior, although exceptions or "anomalies" may sometimes be included for certain programs. If Congress does not pass a CR and appropriations bills have not been enacted, the government shuts down, as it did for 17 days in October 2013 and three days in January 2018.

APPROPRIATION PROCESS

Unlike the budget process, which is initiated by the administration, the appropriations process rests entirely in the hands of Congress. After Congress passes a budget resolution, the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations divide the top-line figure for discretionary spending among their 12 respective appropriations subcommittees. The two appropriations subcommittees that provide the majority of funding for affordable housing and community development programs are the Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies (T-HUD) Subcommittee and the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Subcommittee in each chamber of Congress.

Each subcommittee must divide the amount of funding allocated by the Committee on Appropriations between the various priorities funded in its bill.

Each subcommittee must also determine the priority programs within each of their bills and provide sufficient funding for those priorities. In order to determine its priorities, the T-HUD subcommittees hold hearings, during which HUD or USDA officials testify regarding specific programs and initiatives included in the president's request. Witnesses in these hearings provide a far greater level of detail on programmatic activity than witnesses testifying at budget committee hearings, which focus on overall proposed spending rather than particular activities.

After appropriations hearings are completed, the subcommittees craft their bills. The subcommittees then hold a markup of their draft bills, and report out the bill they pass to their respective appropriations committees. The appropriations committees hold a markup of each bill and report out on those bills to Congress. The House and Senate must then negotiate final T-HUD and Agriculture bills. Once these bills are passed by Congress, they are signed into law by the president.

FORECAST FOR 2018

In February 2018, Congress reached an agreement to lift the low spending caps that were put in place under the Budget Control Act of 2011 (BCA) for Fiscal Years 2018 and 2019. The low spending caps have made it difficult for Congress to fund domestic programs, including affordable housing and community development, at the levels necessary.

At the time this goes to print, Congress must decide how to divvy up the additional funding available for their FY 2018 spending bills, and it will then turn its attention to beginning the appropriations process for FY19. NLIHC strongly advocates for the highest allocation possible for affordable housing and community development programs at HUD and USDA.

NLIHC strongly opposes the president's FY19 budget request, which proposed cutting housing benefits by slashing federal investments in affordable housing and increasing rents and imposing harmful work requirements on families who receive federal housing assistance. In his FY19 budget request, the president proposed drastic cuts to HUD and USDA rural housing programs that would result in the loss of at least 200,000 Housing Choice Vouchers, the elimination of the national Housing Trust Fund, the elimination of funding to repair – and deep cuts operational funding for – public housing, and the elimination of flexible resources used by state and local governments to address their pressing housing and community development needs, among other harmful cuts. The president's proposal to cut housing benefits would only make it harder for families to live in stable housing, undermining their ability to live with dignity and climb the economic ladder

WHAT TO SAY TO LEGISLATORS

- Advocates should weigh in with the administration and Congress on the importance of ending sequestration altogether and the importance of strong housing funding.

- Advocates should urge their Members of Congress to provide robust funding for HUD and USDA affordable housing programs. If Members of Congress do not hear from advocates, they will not know how important these programs are in their districts and states.
- Advocates should let their Members of Congress know that the low spending caps required by law have already resulted in the loss of affordable housing opportunities in their states and districts. In order to prevent further loss of HUD and USDA rural housing units, Congress needs to end sequestration. At the time this goes to print, it is unknown whether Congress has agreed to lift the low spending caps for the current FY.
