LIHC’s HoUSed campaign for long-term affordable housing advances anti-racist policies and works to achieve the large-scale, sustained investments and reforms necessary to ensure that renters with the lowest incomes have an affordable place to call home. Bold policies are needed to ensure the most marginalized people in the U.S., especially low-income people of color, have decent, stable, accessible and affordable homes.

To achieve this, we must:

1. Bridge the gap between incomes and housing costs by expanding rental assistance to every eligible household. Today, only one in four households eligible for rental assistance receives it. Learn more about how we can ensure rental assistance is universally available.

2. Expand and preserve the supply of rental homes affordable and accessible to people with the lowest incomes. There is no state or congressional district in America with enough supply of affordable housing for families with the lowest incomes. Learn more about ways to build and preserve affordable homes.

3. Provide emergency rental assistance to households in crisis by creating a national housing stabilization fund. Millions of households are one financial shock away from economic hardship that could quickly spiral out of control. Learn more about how we can stabilize households during a crisis.

4. Strengthen and enforce renter protections. The power imbalance between renters and landlords puts renters at risk of housing instability and homelessness. Learn more about how we can build power for renters.

Congress is working to enact a budget reconciliation bill to tackle inflation and lower costs for households. To help achieve these ambitious goals, Congress must provide robust housing investments to ensure households with the greatest needs have a stable, accessible, affordable home. Any reconciliation bill that advances must include the targeted housing investments in the House-passed Build Back Better Act and the HoUSed campaign’s top three priorities.

• $25 billion to expand rental assistance to an additional 300,000 extremely low-income households, including those experiencing and at risk of homelessness. Rental assistance is a critical tool for helping the lowest-income people afford decent, stable, accessible housing, and it has a proven track record of reducing homelessness and housing poverty. A growing body of research finds that rental assistance can improve health and educational outcomes and increase children’s chances of long-term success.

• $65 billion to repair and preserve public housing, which is home to 2.5 million residents. Public housing is critical to ensuring people with the greatest needs have a safe, decent, affordable, and accessible place to call home, and the preservation of this community asset must be included in any strategy to ensure housing is a human right.

• $15 billion to build and preserve 150,000 homes through the national Housing Trust Fund for households with the greatest needs. The national Housing Trust Fund is the first new federal housing resource in a generation exclusively targeted to build and preserve rental homes affordable to people with the lowest incomes. It is the only federal housing production program targeted to address the market failure that is an underlying cause of homelessness.

These housing investments must be included in any future budget reconciliation bill.

TALKING POINTS

• The historic, targeted housing investments in the House-passed Build Back Better Act directly address the growing disparity between housing costs and stagnant incomes for people with the lowest incomes:

  • By expanding rental assistance, the reconciliation bill can help bridge the gap between wages and housing costs for America’s lowest-income and most marginalized households.

  • In the U.S., renters need an annual income of nearly $50,000 or $23.96 an hour on average to afford a modest, two-bedroom apartment. This is far above the incomes of many working families, seniors, and people with disabilities.

  • Since 1960, renters’ incomes have increased by 5%, while rents have risen 61%.

  • In only 5% of all U.S. counties can a full-time minimum-wage worker afford a one-bedroom rental home at fair market rent.

  • There are no counties where a minimum wage worker can afford a two-bedroom rental home at fair market rent.
• The targeted housing investments in the House-passed Build Back Better Act directly address the underlying cause of America’s housing crisis: a severe shortage of rental homes affordable to people with the lowest incomes.
  • By preserving the nation’s public housing and building new homes affordable to people with the greatest needs through the national Housing Trust Fund, the reconciliation bill can directly address the severe shortage of affordable housing for people with the lowest incomes.
  • Nationally, there is a shortage of 7 million homes affordable and available to the lowest-income renters.
  • For every 10 of the lowest-income renter households, there are fewer than 4 homes affordable and available to them.
  • There is not a single state or congressional district in the country with enough affordable homes to meet this demand.
  • Eight million of the lowest-income renters pay at least half of their incomes on rent, leaving them without the resources they need to put food on the table, purchase needed medications, or make ends meet.

• The targeted housing resources included in the House-passed Build Back Better Act are critically needed after decades of federal disinvestment:
  • The private sector cannot – on its own – build and maintain homes affordable to the lowest-income renters without federal support.
  • Despite the clear and urgent need, only one in four households who qualify for housing assistance receives it due to decades of chronic underfunding by Congress.
  • Millions of eligible households are on waiting lists – often for several years – waiting for housing assistance, and most never receive it. While people wait for assistance, many are pushed into homelessness, institutionalization, or incarceration.
  • Congress has divested from public housing for decades, resulting in over $70 billion in unmet capital backlog needs. As a result, our nation loses 10,000 to 15,000 units of public housing every year to obsolescence or decay, and other units fall into disrepair.
  • Recent estimates show that converting public housing through Rental Assistance Demonstration could consume massive amounts of Low Income Housing Tax Credits over the next ten years – up to 61% of the 4% credits and 20% of the 9% credits. Repairing public housing will make these tax credit development resources available to other projects for new affordable homes.

• People of color – especially women of color – and other marginalized renters are most harmed by the housing crisis and would directly benefit from the targeted housing investments in the House-passed Build Back Better Act.
  • Ensuring accessible, affordable housing is provided to the lowest-income people – through rental assistance and investments in the HTF and public housing – would help ensure that renters of color and individuals with disabilities have access to affordable housing and robust housing choice.
  • Black households account for 13% of all households, but 26% of all extremely low-income renters and 40% of people experiencing homelessness.
  • Latino households account for 12% of all U.S. households, 21% of extremely low-income renters, and 22% of people experiencing homelessness.
• Native Americans are dramatically overrepresented among people experiencing homelessness.

• Decades of structural racism and ongoing discrimination have created racial disparities in housing, which contribute to inequities in wealth, education, health and more. Housing segregation was designed through intentional public policy, resulting in today's highly segregated communities.

• People with disabilities face barriers to affordable housing because of the lack of accessibility in our housing stock and the location of housing far from critical services.

• Because housing is linked to nearly every measure of having a high-quality life, the targeted housing investments in the House-passed Build Back Better Act will have broad, positive impacts.

  • Housing justice is racial equity. Racial inequity in education, income, wealth, employment, and health is driven in large part by racial segregation and discrimination in housing.

  • Housing can help close the education gap. Children learn better and are more likely to graduate when they live in stable, affordable homes.

  • Housing is health care. A quality affordable home is a prescription for good health. It has been linked to prevention of long-term health problems and promotes healthy, productive lives.

  • Housing supports economic mobility. Safe, affordable housing allows low-income people to climb up the income ladder and achieve financial stability.

  • Housing assistance reduces poverty. Access to affordable housing increases stability for marginalized households and helps avert homelessness.
