Investing in Lives and Neighborhoods through the Housing Production Trust Fund

Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development

Mission Statement

The Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development leads nonprofit community development organizations in ensuring that residents with low and moderate incomes have housing and economic opportunities in neighborhoods throughout the District of Columbia.

Forward

A Decade of Progress: Investing in Lives and Neighborhood through the Housing Production Trust Fund was prepared by staff of the Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development (CNHED) for distribution, initially, at CNHED's special event held in October 2012 to celebrate the accomplishments of the Housing Production Trust Fund in the decade since passage of the Housing Act of 2002. primary source document for the data contained in the report is the "District of Columbia Housing Production Trust Fund Fiscal Year 2011 Fourth Quarter Report" prepared by the DC Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) for submission to the Council of the District of Columbia. The focus of this report is on the number of "affordable units" documented in the Trust Fund Fourth Quarter Report and the corresponding amounts of funding provided by the Trust Fund. CNHED developed the project descriptions as well as all other narrative sections of the report. CNHED obtained addresses for funded projects and categorized projects by Ward based on DHCD's report and in some instances its own research. Project listings, including unit counts, funding amounts and total development costs, were drawn directly from the Trust Fund report, except in a few instances where missing unit counts were obtained from DHCD. This report is intended to make information about the Trust Fund more accessible to the public, and is not intended to serve as the official source for data about the Fund. Anyone wanting further information should refer to the Department of Housing and Community Development's quarterly Housing Production Trust Fund reports or address queries directly to the agency.

Acknowledgements

An important acknowledgement CNHED wishes to make is to recognize the seminal contribution the DC Department of Housing and Community Development has made to providing affordable housing in the District of Columbia, by operating the Housing Production Trust Fund in an efficient and effective manner. Without the good work of DHCD's leadership and staff, we would not have had a decade of significant accomplishment to report on and celebrate.

Of equal importance is the work of the District's affordable housing providers whose projects are highlighted in this report. Their determination and drive to produce and presser ve affordable housing, despite all of its challenges, was critical in achieving the results documented in this report.

Finally, CNHED recognizes the significant role played by low and moderate income residents who need affordable housing , want to improve their living conditions, aspire to purchase their own home and advocate for housing for others. Witnessing the impact of the Housing Production Trust Fund on their lives and neighborhoods should inspire all of us to do more and to commit to maintaining a strong and vigorous Trust Fund in the coming decade.

HIGHLIGHTS OF DC'S HOUSING PRODUCTION TRUST FUND

Since 2002, the Housing Production Trust Fund (HPTF) has been helping to create vibrant neighborhoods in the District of Columbia as the key tool for preserving and developing affordable housing. The Trust Fund, administered by the DC Department of Housing and Community Development, enabled nonprofit housing providers, mission-driven for profit developers, and renters wishing to exercise their Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act rights to complete over 7,500 units with hundreds more on the way.

Properties benefiting from the Housing Production Trust Fund can be found all over Washington, DC, impacting families and individuals, renters and home owners, as well as the communities in which they live. This flexible tool has helped keep residents in changing neighborhoods like Mount Pleasant, rehabilitated blighted and vacant buildings, and helped renters become homeowners. The Housing Production Trust Fund is an important tool for our communities.

- It has produced and preserved over 7,500 units of affordable housing across every Ward in the District.
- Estimated conservatively, more than 15,000 DC residents currently live in units funded by the Trust Fund.
- It has invested $320 million in DC neighborhoods and leveraged an additional $794 million of financing from private and other sources, for a total of $1.1 billion in development.
- For every dollar invested from the Trust Fund, $2.50 was invested from other sources.
- It has created an estimated ten thousand short-term and permanent jobs.
- It has strong guidelines that prescribe levels and lengths of affordability to serve District residents with the greatest housing need.
- It has been used to add or improve housing across the Continuum of Housing: supportive housing, affordable rental housing, and affordable ownership housing.
- When used with DC's Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act, it provides tenants with the opportunity to stay in their homes and preserve affordable housing for themselves and their neighbors.

ONGOING CUTS THREATEN THE TRUST FUND

* $2 million of the $18 million cut in FY 2012 has now been restored in the FY12 Supplemental Budget. Ongoing DHCD Admin costs are estimated based on the FY 2013 budget.

In recent years, the Housing Production Trust Fund has been severely weakened. During the recession in the late 2000's, property sales fell drastically. As a result, much less money was collected by Deed Recordation and Transfer taxes, and funding for the Trust Fund fell to very low levels. Although the real estate market did begin to pick up in recent years, the Trust Fund received a major $18 million cut in the Fiscal Year 2012 budget, bringing the amount of funding available for new production and preservation efforts down to only $13 million (see chart above). The $18 million transfer to the DC Housing Authority (DCHA) was used to pay for the ongoing cost of the Local Rent Supplement Program, a program that had been previously funded from the general fund. This trend continued in FY13, when the amount transferred to DCHA increased to $20 million. For FY 2013, the Council pledged proceeds from the sale of city owned property to restore most of this cut, and the Mayor and Council also pledged future revenue increases to restore funding. However, these promised actions have yet to occur. Even if funding is restored for FY 2013, the $20 million cut could continue in FY 2014 and beyond (as shown in the chart above) unless permanent restoration is made in the District's budget.

HOUSING PRODUCTION TRUST FUND REPORT

THE TRUST FUND HAS HAD VALUABLE IMPACT ON THE DISTRICT'S RESIDENTS AND NEIGHBORHOODS OVER THE LAST DECADE. THIS REPORT HIGHLIGHTS ITS IMPORTANT WORK.

The Trust Fund Brings Investment to DC

The Housing Production Trust Fund (HPTF) leverages millions of dollars in financing from private and other sources. Over the last decade, HPTF provided $320 million for financing and leveraged an additional $794 million. In total, HPTF has resulted in more than $1.1 billion of total development. Public investment is crucial to developing low-income housing projects; without the Trust Fund, much of this investment would not have occurred.

The Trust Fund Creates Jobs

The National Association of Home Builders estimates that building 100 new low income housing multifamily units¹ for families can lead to the creation of more than 120 jobs during the construction phase. Furthermore, once the paint is dry and the homes are occupied, new residents continue to support roughly 30 jobs in a wide array of industries.² Using this as a guide, housing production financed by the Housing Production Trust Fund over the last decade created as many as 9,000 jobs during construction and an additional 2,250 spinoff jobs after occupancy. It is clear that thousands of jobs have resulted from the Housing Production Trust Fund, and that housing development is a major economic generator.

DC's Trust Fund is a Model Nationally

DC's Housing Production Trust Fund is one of the most successful housing trust funds in the nation. Aside from the thousands of units HPTF has produced, it also has strict requirements that ensure it is used to house families and individuals with the greatest need. HPTF's requirement that 80 percent of its funding be used to provide housing for households at or below 50 percent of Area Median Income puts it in the vanguard of housing trust funds. According to required annual filings, the District's Trust Fund has successfully met this requirement.

Implementation

The major funding source of the Trust Fund is the Real Estate Recordation and Transfer Tax. Its governing legislation also allows for additional funding sources, such as "fee contributions made by commercial developers under a commercial linked development policy," which were never developed and implemented. The Trust Fund also gets repayment of the principal and interest from the loans given out by the fund, as well as interest earned on investments made. Occasionally, one-time fees, grants and donations contribute to the Trust Fund.

The Trust Fund is dispersed by the DC Department of Housing and Community Development as low-interest or zero-interest loans to produce or preserve affordable housing in accordance with Trust Fund guidelines. In most cases, the projects are proposed as a part of a competitive Request for Proposals process initiated by DHCD. Tenants wishing to use Trust Fund dollars to purchase a building under the Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act can apply for funds from DHCD at any time, due to the time sensitive nature of that process.

Site Acquisition Funding Initiative (SAFI)

Responding to a request from the Coalition for Nonprofit Housing and Economic Development (CNHED), the Department of Housing and Community Development developed a new program in 2005 to help nonprofit housing developers purchase property for development or rehabilitation of affordable housing. The program, the Site Acquisition Funding Initiative (SAFI), provided $25 million from the Housing Production Trust Fund to a group of select lenders. The lenders are required to match the funds at least one-to-one, leveraging the Trust Fund investment, and then offer loans with below market interest rates for site acquisition and pre-development to qualified nonprofits. According to DHCD, “SAFI was designed to provide quickly accessible, revolving loan funds for nonprofit developers committed to the production, rehabilitation, and preservation of affordable housing.”

SAFI has been used successfully by nonprofits across the city, enabling them to act quickly to secure property, and allowing time for the longer-term development process.

History of Advocacy for the Housing Production Trust Fund

Councilmember Charlene Drew Jarvis sponsored legislation that created the Housing Production Trust Fund in 1988, but it did not have a guaranteed source of revenue. In 2000, CNHED commissioned a research report on housing trust funds and submitted it to the Williams Administration, recommending that the City dedicate tax revenues to the Fund. Subsequently, in 2001, Mayor Anthony Williams submitted legislation to the DC Council to dedicate 15% of the District’s Real Estate Recordation and Transfer Tax to the Trust Fund. After the bill³ was introduced at the DC Council, housing advocates and hundreds of residents successfully pushed for a number of improvements to the legislation, which passed in January 2002. The new law, the Housing Act of 2002, made HPTF a meaningful tool for affordable housing,⁴ kick-started with a one-time $25 million contribution from the sale of city-owned property.⁵

Among the improvements to the legislation won by advocates was clarification and strengthening of targeting guidelines for use of HPTF. Housing developed by the Trust Fund would now need to meet several criteria for the length of affordability, the type of housing, and affordability at certain income levels. New provisions required that at least 50% of HPTF must be for rental housing because of the high proportion of renters in DC. Trust Fund dollars were also required to target very low income residents — 40% of the funds were designated for assisting households with incomes under 30% of Area Median Income (AMI), 40% for 31-50% AMI, and 20% for 51-80% AMI.

In addition, units receiving funds from HPTF have to remain affordable; homeownership units for at least 10-15 years, and rental units for not less than 40 years. Each of these provisions was designed to ensure that the Trust Fund would be used to provide housing for District residents with the greatest need.

Perhaps the most important element of the Housing Act of 2002 was the identification of an ongoing funding source. HPTF is funded in large part by a dedicated revenue stream of 15% of the DC Real Estate Recordation and Transfer Tax. This tax, based on the value of property at the point of sale, is the primary contributor of revenue to the Trust Fund. Because the tax occurs when property is sold, the mechanism allows the Trust Fund to grow as residential and commercial development occurs in the District.

Over the next decade, advocates continued to fight to protect the Trust Fund. First, changing priorities threatened the dedicated revenue source. At one time, the Mayor and DC Council considered cutting the dedicated source from 15% to 7.5% of the Real Estate Recordation and Transfer Tax. However, advocates successfully convinced the DC Council three times to maintain the full commitment to the Trust Fund. In 2006, CNHED recognized Councilmember Jack Evans for his early efforts to achieve full funding and later significantly increase revenues dedicated to the Fund. “We learned that we could never let our guard down,” said Bob Pohlman of CNHED. “It was only through the constant vigilance of advocates and the help of key allies on the DC Council that we preserved full funding for the Trust Fund.”

When the housing bubble burst in 2008, the economic crash particularly hurt the Housing Production Trust Fund. HPTF depended on a tax that comes from property sales, and without those sales, the Trust Fund lost significant funding. At this point the Trust Fund had a long pipeline of projects to which funding had been committed but not yet dispersed, and was unable to make new loans.

Again, CNHED and other housing advocates mobilized to address this issue. In the summer of 2008, CNHED's Housing Committee began the Campaign to Stabilize the Housing Production Trust Fund. That fall, the DC Council, led by Councilmember Marion Barry and co-sponsored by six other Councilmembers, introduced the "Housing Production Trust Fund Stabilization Amendment Act of 2008." The amendment would guarantee minimum levels of funding from Real Estate Recordation and Transfer Taxes for the Trust Fund: $70 million in FY 2010, $80 million in FY 2011, and $80 million plus inflation thereafter.⁶

CNHED members advocated tirelessly, including packing a nine-hour hearing with 90 witnesses and overflowing the Council Chamber with over 200 residents and practitioners to highlight the importance of the fund and the need for higher funding levels. By the end of the year, the Council voted unanimously to pass the amendment.⁷

However, the Council passed this amendment subject to appropriation and the District government has never dedicated the funds necessary to reach this funding floor. As a result, the Housing Production Trust Fund continues to be a limited tool to meet the housing need.

Recent Challenges to the Housing Production Trust Fund

Additional conditions have threatened the effectiveness of the Housing Production Trust Fund. Beginning in 2007, a portion of HPTF has been used to support the New Communities Initiative. The cost of debt service on securitized New Communities bonds currently comes out of the Trust Fund, leading to an annual loss of available funds for production. In Fiscal Year 2012, that amount was nearly $7 million of $43 million total HPTF revenue.

There was an opportunity to clear out the pipeline and begin to fund new projects when the real estate market began to pick up in recent years. Instead, HPTF received a major cut in the FY 2012 budget, just two years after the Council committed to funding the Trust Fund at higher levels. In the spring of 2011, The Mayor proposed and the DC Council voted for a budget that would use $18 million from the Trust Fund to pay for the ongoing cost of the Local Rent Supplement Program (LRSP) by transferring the funds to the DC Housing Authority. Previous to this time, the LRSP had been paid for from the District's General Fund. In FY 2012, this cut, along with New Communities debt service and DHCD's administrative costs, reduced the amount of funding left for new production and preservation efforts to only $13 million. Although this was an unprecedented use of the Trust Fund, and despite vocal opposition by CNHED members through the Housing For All Campaign, this trend continues and has expanded. In FY 2013, the total transfer to the Housing Authority for LRSP will be $19.9 million. Unless a permanent alternative solution to using HPTF to pay for the ongoing cost of LRSP is implemented, it will drain the Fund from its intended use indefinitely.

Housing Production Trust Fund and the Continuum of Housing

The Housing Production Trust Fund is the key local tool for creating new and preserving existing affordable housing in the District of Columbia. The Trust Fund has been used on affordable projects across the Continuum of Housing, providing permanent homes to individuals and families with diverse needs for housing and services. The Continuum of Housing includes supportive housing, low cost rental housing, and low cost homeownership.

The Trust Fund is a capital investment tool that can provide the backbone of funding for all types of affordable housing. This flexible tool has been used independently and in combination with private and public funds to meet a diversity of housing needs.

Supportive housing is a combination of affordable housing with services that helps people who face the most complex challenges, such as mental illness, chemical dependency, and HIV/AIDS, become stably housed. The Trust Fund is most successful in these cases when matched with an operating subsidy such as the Local Rent Supplement Program (LRSP) or Housing First. For example, So Others Might Eat (SOME) has successfully developed hundreds of units using the Trust Fund and LRSP.

Rental housing has been preserved and created through the use of the Trust Fund. Thousands of vacant or dilapidated units have been rehabilitated by the Trust Fund into vibrant, livable spaces. Community Preservation and Development Corporation (CPDC) has used the Trust Fund to develop a number of large-scale buildings, impacting hundreds of rental units at a time. Smaller projects all over the city have also been preserved as affordable rental housing, such as Webster Gardens developed by THC Affordable Housing, INC.

and Somerset Development in Ward 4. These rental projects leverage Trust Fund investment with significant outside investment from the public and private sector to fund long term sustainable projects.

The Trust Fund has also helped move hundreds of households from renting to homeownership. Many of these transitions were made possible by the Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act, which offers tenants the opportunity to collectively purchase the multi-family developments that they live in when the owners put them up for sale. Through investment by the DC government, using the Trust Fund as the key local funding tool, dozens of buildings around the District have been purchased by tenants or their development partners and turned into affordable cooperatives and condominiums. It is virtually impossible for low-income tenants or their partners to afford to purchase and renovate multi-family properties, while keeping them affordable, without the support of public funds. As a result of supporting tenants in the purchases, the buildings have been kept from becoming high-cost rental or condominiums units that would have forced existing tenants out. In addition, the residents have control over the future use of their buildings and can choose to ensure long term affordability by forming limited equity cooperatives or build equity and enjoy other benefits of homeownership by making it possible for tenants to purchase their apartments as condos.

The St. Dennis apartments are located in the heart of Historic Mount Pleasant. After years of neglect and disrepair, the previous owners sought to sell the apartment building and replace the low cost rental units with newly renovated market rate condos. The Martinez family believed in another option, dreaming of high-quality, low cost rental housing available to themselves and their neighbors. Resisting buy-out offers and intimidation, the Martinez family stayed as the lone tenants and fought to maintain the St. Dennis as a home that they could afford. Through a partnership with National Housing Trust-Enterprise Preservation Corporation, that dream has become a reality. The Martinez family has been able to move into this newly renovated building, with all units available to residents who make less than 60% AMI including eight units set aside for very low income households who qualify for the Housing Choice Voucher Program.

The Trust Fund investment came through the Site Acquisition Funding Initiative (SAFI), which encourages lenders to help developers purchase buildings by matching lenders' dollars with Trust Fund dollars. To help bridge a development funding gap, DHCD deferred repayment of their portion of the SAFI loan and allowed the Trust Fund dollars to remain in the development for the long term as permanent debt.

Completed in 2010, the Ontario Court Apartments are representative of Jubilee Housing’s model that supports housing stability and services that provide opportunities. Jubilee Housing is a faith based nonprofit owner, developer, property manager, and service provider with nearly forty years in Adams Morgan.

The redevelopment consists of 27 affordable homes, the majority leased to residents making less than 30 percent AMI. This first-of-its-kind transaction used $3.4 million from the Housing Production Trust Fund along with mortgage financing and New Markets Tax Credit (NMTC) equity for a total investment of $9.3 million. This redevelopment preserves housing for long term affordability, while utilizing on-site space in innovative ways. Utilizing NMTC financing, the project created an on-site early childcare development center, Jubilee JumpStart, which supports 50 low-income children from six weeks to five years old. For this population, early childhood development is often the critical difference in if a child falls behind or succeeds.

The Ontario Court Apartments and Jubilee JumpStart provide great opportunities for low-income families in Adams Morgan. It has allowed low-income households to stabilize, escape rent burden and reach larger life goals; young children are prepared to thrive, through nurturing cognitive, language and emotional development; and parents can work without worrying about childcare.

The historic R Street Apartments were built 100 years ago, and have been affordable housing for over four decades. Located in the heart of Logan Circle, they are in the middle of new housing and business development along the 14th Street corridor. They provide convenient access to public transportation, jobs, and shopping.

When these historic buildings were put up for sale by the previous owner, residents worried they would be displaced if the buildings were converted to high price rental housing or condos. Instead, tenants worked with the National Housing Trust-Enterprise Preservation Corporation and Hampstead Companies who were able to assemble the necessary financing, including funds from the Housing Production Trust Fund, to acquire the buildings and make much needed improvements. In addition to preserving 124 units of affordable housing, these apartments were upgraded to meet high standards of green building. The upgrades will protect the environment and save tenants money. The rehabilitation included all major systems, roofs, kitchens, flooring, and common areas as well as the addition of six new market rate units.

Located in the heart of Logan Circle, 1417 N Street Cooperative is one of the most recent products of the Housing Production Trust Fund. It was purchased by the tenant association in July of 2011. Tenant leaders were vocal advocates for the Trust Fund, with hopes that they and others around the city would be able to purchase their buildings. They planned to buy and improve a building that had numerous problems including a faulty elevator, pest infestation, and leaks. The diverse community of tenants, supported by the Latino Economic Development Center (LEDC), had organized together for years for building improvements, but with limited success. Now that the residents are owners of their building, plans for full renovations are underway.

The Logan Circle neighborhood has very limited low cost housing options. 1417 N Street Cooperative now allows for low- and moderate income residents to become owners and live in an area close to downtown with great access to food, jobs, education, health services, transit, and recreation.

Woodley House, Inc. was founded in 1958 as one of the first community-based care providers in the country. It was created by Joan Doniger, who left St. Elizabeths Hospital where she worked as an occupational therapist because she believed she could better serve residents with mental illnesses in a community-based environment. It has continued in that model and served District residents with mental illnesses since that time. These quiet buildings house small numbers of residents at a time, providing a safe, secure home within the District's quiet Northwest neighborhoods of Adams Morgan, Woodley Park and Cleveland Park. The Woodley House residential care model has been nationally recognized. Woodley House focuses on the individual and personal treatment plans with the goal of returning residents to the community. (The Woodley House properties consist of four scattered properties; one property is in Ward 4.)

WEBSTER GARDENS

124-130 WEBSTER ST NW

Webster Gardens, located near the Old Soldier's Home in Ward 4, was purchased and renovated through a joint venture between THC Affordable Housing, Inc. and Somerset Development Company, LLC. This project created 52 newly renovated units while preserving affordable housing for 28 original households, many of whom are seniors, and securing affordability for them in the future.

The renovations restored and preserved the historic character of the four building complex, abated the extensive environmental hazards that existed there, and provided more efficient heating and cooling systems, kitchens and baths. To facilitate a program of resident services, community spaces and a computer lab at each property were included in the renovations.

"I stayed at Webster Gardens all these years because of the neighborhood, and the rent was affordable. Over the years, though, the buildings became almost unlivable and the landlord put them up for sale. The part I especially liked was that the rent would remain affordable and no one would have to move if they didn't want to. We now have a beautiful complex with new landscaping, modern kitchens and bathrooms, an intercom system, community room, computer lab and many resident services."

OPEN ARMS HOUSING (DUNBAR)

570 ST NW

Open Arms Housing, Inc., “provides permanent homes with ongoing support for women in DC who have lived on the streets or in shelters for years.” Open Arms owns the Dunbar, a small single site setting for homeless women with a wide range of mental health issues that provides low-barrier permanent housing. The building is designed to meet the individual and community needs of these women. The three-story building has 16 individual efficiency apartments that include a kitchen and bathroom. There are also community rooms on each floor to help build relationships and provide a location for on-site support groups. Three one-bedroom apartments accommodate live-in volunteers and women who pay fair market rent.

The women who live at the Dunbar have experienced significant struggles with homelessness; residents average eight years of homelessness. Open Arms provides housing as well as on-site supportive services and access to intensive services to help the women permanently address the conditions that led to homelessness. Each resident pays one third of her income in rent. Because of the high cost of operating housing with very low contributions from tenants, the Dunbar is also funded with operating subsidies from the DC Housing Authority.

THE WILLOWBROOK

1029 PERRY ST NE

The Willowbrook is located at 1029 Perry St. NE in the Brookland neighborhood. Just three blocks from the Brookland/Catholic University Metro Station on the red line, this 16-unit building was purchased using the Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act. The tenants worked with Manna Inc. to restore the building because they wanted to work with a nonprofit developer, and Manna was able to use the Housing Production Trust Fund to renovate the building and create low priced condominiums. In 2008, the original tenants were able to begin putting contracts on units, and the other units have since been purchased by outside low and moderate income buyers.

Manna works extensively with prospective homeowners, including credit counseling, homebuyer training, and a homebuyers club. This upfront investment ensures that residents are prepared for homeownership, which protects the homebuyer as well as the District's investment.

“Owning a home and the road I took through Manna to get there has changed my life for the better. As a result of Manna’s Homebuyers Club, which is a part of Manna’s affordable homeownership services, and the city’s Home Purchase Assistance Program, known as HPAP, I was able to become a homeowner; without those two things I don’t know where I would be. Owning property in the District, where rent is so high, has made it possible for me to afford to live here and to continue my health care.”

PLEASANT PARK CO-OP

CLAY ST, BANKS PL, AND 63RD ST NE

Located in the heart of Ward 7, the Pleasant Park Cooperative is a 60-unit collection of garden apartments owned by the residents. The conversion from rental property to cooperative has made the tenants the owners and decision-makers in their housing. Like other forms of homeownership, it provides them with equity and stability. Tenants worked with Mi Casa, Inc. to purchase the buildings in 2007. With support from Mi Casa and the DC Department of the Environment, the cooperative underwent a green weatherization that included upgrades of heating and cooling systems, improved insulation, and installation of Energy Star appliances. Mi Casa helped secure a predevelopment loan to continue to work with the co-op on a plan to completely rehabilitate the complex. Mi Casa assisted Pleasant Park in applying for gap financing from DHCD in 2012, and additional funds were awarded as a result.

Pleasant Park is made up of two-story duplexes which open onto green courtyards, reflecting a classic District style. It is located close to transit lines and an elementary and high school.

MAYFAIR MANSIONS

3819 JAY ST NE

Mayfair Mansions is a series of historic structures located in the Mayfair neighborhood of the Northeast quadrant of Washington, DC. These three-story garden apartments were built in the 1940’s. Mayfair Mansions was designed and built by Howard Professor Albert Cassell, one of the District’s first professional African American architects. When built, Mayfair Mansions was among the first federally subsidized housing projects for African Americans. It provided housing opportunity for working- and middle-class African Americans who had been excluded from other housing options.

In 2005, the residents exercised their Right of First Refusal under the Tenant Opportunity to Purchase Act to purchase the property and sought a development partner who would be interested in addressing the long term physical problems, be committed to preserving the property as affordable housing and would be willing to engage the residents as participants in the development process. The tenants chose to work with Community Preservation and Development Corporation (CPDC). CPDC worked with tenant leaders to accomplish substantial long term preservation of 72% of the development (12 of 17 buildings) as affordable rental housing even after making substantial renovations.

Hundreds of those units had their affordability ensured through a renewed Section 8 contract, which will make them affordable to very low income residents for 20 years. The rehabilitation of the units included a host of significant improvements, including mechanical, plumbing, and electrical system upgrades; sprinklers in all buildings and units; new fire alarm and security systems; completely new kitchens and bathrooms; new flooring; new windows and doors; roof replacement; and a tot lot.

KUEHNER HOUSE*

1667 GOOD HOPE RD SE

Kuehner House was purchased and rehabilitated by SOME, Inc. (So Others Might Eat). SOME's first affordable housing program designed specifically for the elderly, Kuehner House opened in 2011. The building contains 48 single rooms and efficiencies, including six for abused and neglected elderly, and features a spacious day center for residents. Each resident has a washer and dryer in his or her apartment or suite, and an elevator was added to the building during construction. These amenities are necessary for elderly residents to be as self-sufficient and active as possible. Kuehner House was developed as part of a multi-building effort which impacted a total of 250 units across Ward 7 and Ward 8, all of which are affordable for residents with incomes under 30% AMI.

“They said: ‘James, what’s wrong with you?’ I broke down and started crying. And I began to tell her the deep things that I was feeling, and they were so old. I was mentally and sexually abused when I was a child. When I was young and strong I could combat it. I did a whole lot of different things to keep my mind off of it. THE OVERLOOK AT OXON RUN

3700 9TH ST SE

This 12-story, 316-unit building located in the Washington Highlands neighborhood has been transformed from an eyesore to a community asset. Built in the early 1960's, the building formerly known as Parkside Terrace, fell into disrepair and was abandoned in 2003. According to the Community Preservation and Development Corporation (CPDC) who rehabilitated the building, “sitting in a prominent intersection in the Washington Highlands neighborhood, one of the District's poorest areas, the building had long been a public nuisance and an impediment to the revitalization of the area.”

CPDC transformed the building, creating a unique model with senior housing and family housing in the same building. The first seven floors are senior housing, with a separate elevator and access, while the upper floors are family housing. CPDC has maintained an eye for security as well as important community and individual resources, such as reading rooms on each floor, a computer lab, community room, laundry facility, and free internet.
